The New Thackeray-Brookfield Letters—American Indian Blankets—Tolstoy Memoirs—Still Another Whistler Anecdote.

In connection with the proposed sale of the Thackeray letters in the Lambert collection, Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., the London publishers, wish to state that they are the owners of the copyright in all unpublished MSS., letters and drawings of W. M. Thackeray, and that they reserve all their rights in the same.

A Three Months' Anonymity.

Literary anonymity continues to perish. The Houghton Mifflin Company announces for publication in March "Overland Red," a "romance of the West Texas country," by an author of established reputation, whose name will not be announced until July 1, more than three months after the book's appearance.

Mary Heaton Vorse.

While thus offering a new puzzle to the curious for solution, the Boston publishers voluntarily solve an old one, that of the authorship of the delightful and convincing "Autobiography of an Elderly Woman," which it now appears, was written by a young one, Mary Heaton Vorse. Mrs. Vorse's first published novel will make its appearance in April, under the title of "The Heart's Country."

American Indian Blankets.

What should be a welcome work is the "Indian Blankets and Their Makers" of George Wharton James, announced for publication this spring by A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago. Blanket weaving is one of the most interesting artistic expressions of native American life, but, while the beauty of the Navaho article is widely known, the characteristic blankets of Teutony Memoirs.

The long announced, much-discussed personal memoirs of Tolstoy, by his son Ilya, will be issued in this country by the Century Company, after serial publication in "The Century Magazine."

Whistler Again.

Henry Holiday, the Pre-Raphaelite painter, contributes in his "Reminiscences of My Life," recently published in England, still another to the steadily growing number of Whistler anecdotes. In 1863 Mr. Holiday organized, together with Holman Hunt, an exhibition of painters rejected by the Royal Academy. Whistler visited it.

Old Redgrave, R. A., came in at this moment. He was entirely sympathetic, and confessed candidly that the council had been right in rejecting the new work, as could be for his colleagues, but pointed out the difficulties the council had to contend with the great number of pictures they had to inspect, and said: "You know very well what everything means when Whistler pleads. 'Why,' he would say, 'with whom? why? what do you call your present exhibition? Isn't that higgledy—and particularly higgledy?'

TOMATOES FROM HOTHOUSE AND BUTTER BEANS CHEAPER

Report That Cabbage, Butter and Eggs Were Lower at Wholesale Failed to Affect the Retail Market—Rabbits Out of Season.

In spite of the report that eggs are selling at 8 cents a dozen wholesale, retail prices at Washington Market have not been visibly affected, and none of the egg dealers would confirm the report.

Butter and cabbage also, it was said, are much cheaper at wholesale, because the "corners" in cold storage food have been broken.

Henley prices so far are unchanged.

Rabbits are "out of season," the final instalment of this season's supply was disposed of last week.

Better beans, French artichokes and hothouse tomatoes are cheaper.
